

The Energy Transition needs YOU!

With an uncertain future on the horizon, many of us wonder how our actions today might impact our world in the short and long term. Can our choices really determine what will happen ten, twenty, or thirty years from now? Foresight is a way for us to understand our options, and how the choices we collectively make will impact us. It is not a crystal ball, showing us a definitive future, but a tool that allows us to explore a number of possible futures. It can help us identify what will affect our lives over the next few decades and envisage potential changes in policies, strategies and behaviours, creating roadmaps that detail what we need to do today to shape our tomorrow.

ENABLE.EU is using foresight to understand how to encourage people to make better and more sustainable energy choices. In the energy sector, targets are set and technologies are often available, but a radical change towards sustainable consumption patterns seems far away from reality. It is now recognised that citizens play an active and fundamental role in producing new social practices that can increase both social wellbeing and the sustainability of the energy transition.

In the November workshop, we will ask you about your daily energy practices to understand what might facilitate or hinder these changes. The workshop will aim to identify shared challenges and possible social practices that can be adopted and replicated in different European contexts. Participants will work in plenary sessions and small groups, where they will have the opportunity to share their experiences and ideas about sustainable energy lifestyle changes in the future..

On the second day, we will call on you to imagine what kind of social, technological and organisational practices could promote more sustainable energy consumption in the next 20-30 years. The transition storyline that emerged in the first ENABLE.EU workshop will serve as the basis for identifying those changes you would like to be part of in the future.

En L'an 2000 was a series of French images created by Jean-Marc Côté and other artists in 1900, that imagined what life would be like in the year 2000.
